About the Author Jack Guttentag is Professor of Finance Emeritus at the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania and founder of GHR Systems, Inc., a mortgage technology company. He actively consults and has aided many government agencies and private financial institutions, including the Department of Housing and Urban Development, USAID, Citicorp and the World Bank

Makes the (probably intentionally) incomprehensible topic of mortgages comprehensible.

I appreciate the great descriptions to explain the meanings of the real estate terms.

This book presents both academic definitions and descriptions along with real-world commentary on practices and procedures. The author has taken care to update the info within the context of new legislation affecting the industry. Highly recommended...

Provides in-depth information on the subject of Mortgages.

It is a great book !

not very useful book

I needed this.
