Eva Jiricna was born in Czechoslovakia and is now one of Britain's foremost architects. She has been associated with staircases since the celebrated glass and steel examples that she designed for the retailers Joseph and Joan & David in the US and Europe. Her most recent work includes Canada Water bus station, part of London Underground's new Jubilee Line Extension. Jiricna has taught and lectured at institutions around the world, and has been made a CBE for services to design. --This text refers to an out of print or unavailable edition of this title.

Lot's of commercial property staircases. Didn't seem to be the best for home research. They sent me two books too.

Boring. Don't be misled by the cover photograph. This book might be of some interest to commercial architects, but it is definitely NOT a dream book for someone who fancies photos of magnificent staircases.

I bought this book, hoping to find pictures of residential staircases, from old and new houses. Instead, I was disappointed to find the book had only commercial staircases. While some of the staircases are quite intriguing, such as a glass staircase, the author should have named the book, "Commercial Staircases" or had a line on the cover which described the true contents of the book. so, buyer beware: buy this book only if your interest is in the commercial application of staircases.!
